Finantsinspeksioon held an open day on 13 April to talk about the more interesting aspects of its work and what happens in the back rooms. The event was attended by some 50 students from different universities.

The open day was opened by Chair of the Finantsinspeksioon management board Kilvar Kessler, who spoke about how working at Finantsinspeksioon gives unique insights into top-level supervision that can make the financial world a better place. "Our work at Finantsinspeksioon lets us contribute to society by making the economy function more efficiently and so making life better for everyone. Staff at Finantsinspeksioon have wonderful opportunities for self-realisation and unique access to knowledge about supervision at the highest level in the world", he said.

Several Finantsinspeksioon employees spoke at the open day about their greatest challenges and achievements. The students were also able to ask questions about topics that had caught their interest. Staff from Finantsinspeksioon explained the career opportunities and practical openings that the institution offers. The day ended with networking and a tour of the historical buildings.

Finantsinspeksioon currently employs 130 staff and is particularly looking to hire analysts, lawyers and IT auditors. Finantsinspeksioon celebrated its 20th anniversary last year.
